POEM OF THE WEEK

BY THE BLACK MAN

When I was born, I was black.
When I grew up, I was black.
When I became a man, I was black.
When I went to the grave, I was black.

But you
When you were born, you were white.
When you grew up, you were white.
When you became a man, you were white.
When you went to the grave, you were white.

And you have the choice to call me colonized!

From the November 1996 issue of Black Flag.

SOUTH AFRICAN ECONOMY NEARING COLLAPSE

The South African government has recently been pushed into making drastic cuts to prevent the economy from collapsing. The government has also implemented various measures to control inflation and prevent the currency from further depreciation.

RACISM TODAY

FIGHTBACK AGAINST RACIST ATTACKS

On Thursday, a black man named Vincent, one of the hunger strikers at the Imbali General Hospital in Durban, spoke about how black people in South Africa are suffering under the racist administration. Vincent said that he had been subjected to violence and discrimination in his workplace, where he worked as a cleaner. He also spoke about the lack of support from the black community, which he said was too afraid to stand up against the government.

JUSTICE FOR THE REVIEWS

As the anti-apartheid movement continues to grow, the government is increasingly forced to confront the issue of human rights. In recent years, there have been several high-profile cases involving the death of black people in police custody. In one such case, a black man named Michael was arrested by the police for allegedly violating a curfew. After being taken to a police station, he was beaten and left unconscious. He later died in hospital. The police have denied any wrongdoing, but the family of the victim has released a statement saying that they believe Michael was killed by the police.

THE ROAD AHEAD

The struggle for racial equality in South Africa is far from over. While some progress has been made, there is still much work to be done. The government must take action to address the root causes of racism, such as poverty, discrimination, and inequality. Only then will we truly be able to move towards a society where all people are treated equally.
ROBIN HOOD REVISITED

THE LONDON METROPOLITAN POLICE yesterday issued a caution to people who were attending the Robin Hood parade. Officers were asked to keep to the main road and to avoid disturbance.

The parade is due to take place next week, in June, during the height of the summer. The police said that the parade, which involves a large number of participants, would be considered by the authorities to be an event of considerable scale.

Question and Answer on Anarchism

(Q) Do the unemployed or unemployed workers possess the same rights and opportunities as employed workers?

(A) In most countries, the unemployed or unemployed workers do not have the same rights and opportunities as employed workers. This is because the system is designed to benefit those who are employed, while neglecting the needs of those who are unemployed.

COMMUNICATIONS

Concerning the unemployed or unemployed workers, we believe that their situation is a result of the capitalist system. The system rewards those who are employed and punishes those who are unemployed. This is why we support the unemployed or unemployed workers, and we encourage others to do the same.

INDUSTRIAL

NUR CONCEDES DEFEAT

In a major concession to the union movement, the NUR has agreed to end its long-running strike, ending a dispute that has lasted for years. The union, which represents workers in the railway industry, had been in conflict with management over issues such as pay, working conditions, and job security. The settlement includes a significant pay increase and improved working conditions for the workers.

SILENT NIGHTMARE?

Despite the apparent resolution of the strike, the mood among workers remains somber. Many fear that the concessions made by the union will only be temporary, and that future conflicts may arise. The situation is emblematic of a wider crisis in the industrial relations system, with workers facing increasing pressure to accept cuts and reductions in their rights.

POWER WORKERS - 6 months on

The seven-month strike by workers at the AEG factory in Basildon has been declared a victory by the union, but its impact on the workforce remains unclear. The strike, which involved thousands of workers, was called in response to management’s plans to close the plant and relocate production. The settlement includes job guarantees and relocation assistance for those who lose their jobs.

STUNNING OCCUPATION

Strikers at the AEG factory have occupied the site in defiance of management’s efforts to shut it down. The occupation, which has entered its third month, has become a symbol of worker resistance against corporate power. The workers are demanding the revival of the factory and the retention of local employment.

BLACK FLAG SUPPLEMENT

Miners Strike

A supplement dedicated to the miners strike. It includes articles about the strike, the Labour Party's response, and the implications for the future.
The last majority of miners were not fighting for victory, but rather a claim to survival. They were fighting for the right to continue working in their jobs. The miners believed that the safety of their families and the livelihood of their communities depended on their ability to continue working. Their fight was not just for the present, but for the future, for the survival of their families and their communities.

In the Miners' Strike of the 1980s, the miners' fight was against the closure of their mines and the threat of unemployment. They were fighting for survival, for the right to work, for the right to provide for their families. The strikers were not just fighting for themselves, but for all working people, for the right to control their own futures and the future of their communities.

The miners' strike was a struggle for justice and fairness. It was a struggle against the imposition of policies that threatened the livelihood of working people. It was a struggle against the idea that the interests of the wealthy and powerful should take precedence over the needs of working people. The miners' strike was a testament to the power of solidarity and the determination of working people to fight for a better future. Their fight continues, and their legacy is a powerful reminder of the importance of standing up for what is right, of fighting for justice and fairness, and of never giving up in the face of adversity.

In this way, the Miners' Strike of the 1980s remains a powerful example of the power of solidarity and the determination of working people to fight for a better future. It is a reminder of the importance of standing up for what is right, of fighting for justice and fairness, and of never giving up in the face of adversity. The miners' fight continues, and their legacy is a powerful reminder of the importance of solidarity and the determination of working people to fight for a better future.
I was the miners' strike winnable?

As the miners' strike enters its seventh week, the debate about the viability of the miners' position continues. There are those who argue that the strike is winnable, while others believe that the miners' situation is bleak. The following are some of the arguments presented by both sides.

The Anti-Miners' Strike Movement

The Anti-Miners' Strike Movement, led by the National Union of Mineworkers (NUM), is confident that the miners' strike can be won. They argue that the miners are well-organised and have the support of the majority of the population. The NUM has been able to mobilise a large number of supporters through a well-organised campaign. The movement has also been able to attract the support of many trade unions and other organisations.

The Government's Position

On the other hand, the Government's position is that the miners' strike is unwinnable. They argue that the miners' demands are too high and that the miners' strike is having a negative impact on the economy. The Government has also been able to mobilise a large number of supporters through a campaign of its own. The Government has also been able to attract the support of many businesses and other organisations.

The Strike's Impact on the Economy

The strike has had a significant impact on the economy. The mining industry is a major contributor to the UK economy, and the strike has caused a significant amount of damage. The miners' demands have also caused a significant amount of damage to the miners themselves. The strike has caused a significant amount of damage to the miners' health and welfare.

The Future of the Strike

The future of the strike is uncertain. It is possible that the miners' strike will be won, but it is also possible that it will be lost. The outcome of the strike will depend on a number of factors, including the miners' ability to mobilise a large number of supporters and the Government's ability to mobilise a large number of supporters.

The Strike's Impact on the Society

The strike has had a significant impact on the society. The miners' strike has caused a significant amount of damage to the miners' health and welfare.
