Heil Hatton!

It is changeling to see these leading figures from the Confederation of British Rail and the National Union of Railwaymen to be so badly beaten by the police. It does not matter that they are not thinking of the workers of the country. If the trade unions were to do what they should be doing, the Labour Party, with the help of workers, would have a better chance of winning the next election. The Labour Party is nothing more than a political machine, while the workers are the ones who should be fighting the battles of the country. The trades unions should be fighting the battles of the workers, and not the Labour Party. The trades unions are fighting the battles of the workers, and not the Labour Party. The trades unions are fighting the battles of the workers, and not the Labour Party.

Time Runs Out For Omori

On January 11th, 1986 17 year old Omori, who had been kidnapped by Brixton police on July 17th, 1985, was executed. He was denied the right to contact his family, denied air mail, denied legal aid, driven insane by the death of his mother, and finally killed. This was the end for Omori - a symbol of the failure of the state to control the working class. If his murder wasn't a warning to others, who was?

FEEDBACK

Dear Black Flag,

We were disappointed with your article in the last issue, and feel that the view of the majority of ex-students is far from being reflected. For a start, the 'Talk and Talk' grossly underestimated the widespread and justifiable hostility of the public to a project which is clearly in conflict with the public's layman's understanding of the issues.

Yours sincerely,
