SELECTED TALES.

The Voice of the Shepherd.

The shepherd and his flock were sitting in the meadow, enjoying the warm summer afternoon. The sun shone brightly in the sky, and the birds chirped merrily. The shepherd, a young man with a kind face and gentle manner, called to his flock, and they came running to him. He then began to sing a song, and the birds joined in, creating a beautiful melody. The shepherd smiled, happy and content. He knew that he was blessed to have such a peaceful life, surrounded by nature and the love of his animals.

The Death of a Shepherd.

A shepherd was lost in the mountains, searching for his lost flock. He stumbled upon a deep crevasse, and before he could react, he fell into it. The pile of rocks that had once been his shelter now lay beneath him, silent and motionless. The shepherd, in his moment of impact, closed his eyes, never to open them again.

POETRY.

HUNGER AND SICKNESS.

Oh, when the days are long and cold,
And hunger and sicknessrule our souls,
Oh, when the pot's empty, and the skies are blue,
And we long for the warmth of a loving friend.

The bread is gone, and what shall we do?
Our stomachs growl, and our hearts cry out.
But even in this time of need,
We find strength and hope in our friends.

HUNGER AND SICKNESS.

The sun sets low on a winter's day,
And the wind howls through the broken trees.
Oh, when the snow falls and the cold remains,
And we long for the warmth of a loving heart.

The fire is low, and the cold seeps in,
And our hearts grow heavy with sorrow.
But even in this time of need,
We find strength and hope in our friends.

The Voice of the Shepherd.

The shepherd and his flock were sitting in the meadow, enjoying the warm summer afternoon. The sun shone brightly in the sky, and the birds chirped merrily. The shepherd, a young man with a kind face and gentle manner, called to his flock, and they came running to him. He then began to sing a song, and the birds joined in, creating a beautiful melody. The shepherd smiled, happy and content. He knew that he was blessed to have such a peaceful life, surrounded by nature and the love of his animals.

The Death of a Shepherd.

A shepherd was lost in the mountains, searching for his lost flock. He stumbled upon a deep crevasse, and before he could react, he fell into it. The pile of rocks that had once been his shelter now lay beneath him, silent and motionless. The shepherd, in his moment of impact, closed his eyes, never to open them again.

The sun sets low on a winter's day,
And the wind howls through the broken trees.
Oh, when the snow falls and the cold remains,
And we long for the warmth of a loving heart.

The fire is low, and the cold seeps in,
And our hearts grow heavy with sorrow.
But even in this time of need,
We find strength and hope in our friends.

The Voice of the Shepherd.

The shepherd and his flock were sitting in the meadow, enjoying the warm summer afternoon. The sun shone brightly in the sky, and the birds chirped merrily. The shepherd, a young man with a kind face and gentle manner, called to his flock, and they came running to him. He then began to sing a song, and the birds joined in, creating a beautiful melody. The shepherd smiled, happy and content. He knew that he was blessed to have such a peaceful life, surrounded by nature and the love of his animals.

The Death of a Shepherd.

A shepherd was lost in the mountains, searching for his lost flock. He stumbled upon a deep crevasse, and before he could react, he fell into it. The pile of rocks that had once been his shelter now lay beneath him, silent and motionless. The shepherd, in his moment of impact, closed his eyes, never to open them again.

The sun sets low on a winter's day,
And the wind howls through the broken trees.
Oh, when the snow falls and the cold remains,
And we long for the warmth of a loving heart.

The fire is low, and the cold seeps in,
And our hearts grow heavy with sorrow.
But even in this time of need,
We find strength and hope in our friends.
VOICE OF INDUSTRY.

When We Think of the Distresses of the People, We Can Only Say: "Let Us Be Kind to Each Other!"

By James L. Sullivan

The distresses of the people are upon every hand. We are all in the same boat, and every one of us is affected by the sufferings of his fellow-countryman. The wants of the people are so great that it is difficult to know where to begin to help them. It is the duty of every one of us to do what we can to alleviate their sufferings. We should not be content with merely giving alms to the poor, but should try to find ways of preventing them from being poor in the first place. If we could only make the people understand their rights and duties, and teach them how to manage their affairs, we should soon see a great improvement in their condition. We should not forget that the wealth of the country is in the hands of the people, and that they are the ones who must do the work of the country. If we could only teach them to work hard, and to save their money, we should soon see a great improvement in the condition of the people. We must not forget that the wealth of the country is in the hands of the people, and that they are the ones who must do the work of the country. If we could only teach them to work hard, and to save their money, we should soon see a great improvement in the condition of the people.