On May 3rd Brian Douglas was arrested after being stopped and searched by Kennington cops, PCs Harrison and Tuffey. After 5 days spent in hospital on a life-support machine, he died as a result of a fractured skull received during the arrest and in Kennington Police Station. He had been struck several times on the back of the head with a US-style long baton, recently introduced into use in this country.

Brian is not only the first to be killed with the new baton, but also the latest in a long line of Black people killed by the cops over the past years. Brian's death is not, and obviously was not seen as an isolated event, but as an increasing threat, particularly to Black people, from an increasingly armed police force.

Brian's family and friends have formed a campaign, demanding justice for his death, a public enquiry, and the withdrawing of the new long batons. On May 14th a loud and angry demonstration was held opposite Kennington Road police station. There were hundreds of people there - a good turnout as the demo was organised at 3 days notice. The cops kept pretty much out of sight, braving massed cries of "murderers" when any emerged from the cordon, until the demonstration tried to march off towards Oval tube, when they blocked off the road in force.

The Justice for Brian Douglas Campaign are organising a series of public meetings to mobilise for a March on June 10th, 12 noon from Clapham Common, to Kennington Park. They're meeting weekly at the moment, and need volunteers, donation to keep the campaign going, and mass distribution of their leaflets.

BRIAN MURDERED

FROM DEATH ROW TO YOU!

...Life Or Death On The Dotted Line

Mumia Abu-Jamal is a radical African-American journalist on death row in Pennsylvania, USA for a 1982 conviction of the murder of a Philadelphia copper. Despite overwhelming evidence of his innocence (obvious forensic mismatches, witness changing stories etc) and the blatant judicial racism and political bias in his legal case, Mumia and his supporters have unsuccessfully battled to have the evidence heard in the courtroom for thirteen years and now appear to have lost the legal battle to save his life. All Mumia's legal appeals have been exhausted, a death warrant can be signed at any time leaving him with only thirty days to live.

The US justice system views every black person as a guilty person. It is a system that maintains the world's highest incarceration rate of people of African descent. Despite making up less than 6% of the US population, black men make up 40% of death row prisoners. As such, it isn't possible to look at Mumia's case in isolation, to look at it as just another framed prisoner story in the pages of CONTRA FLOW. His case is a microcosm of the out and out racist U.S. legal system and a part of the continuing war on black radical organising.

NEVER QUIET

For being angry, outspoken and black, Mumia has been framed and imprisoned and every attempt made to silence him. Through his position at age 15 as Minister of Information with the Philadelphia Black Panther Party (B.P.P.) and his broadcasts as the "voice of the voiceless" in the 1970s for WUHY-FM, Mumia was in constant direct confrontation with the racist state. He is one of few journalists to look behind the media lies surrounding black radical movements, most notably State-planted media disinformation about black organisation MOVE and the cops' year long siege of their Powelton Village house in 1978 and the very public City-sponsored bombing of the MOVE house in Philly that left 11 members dead. Despite imprisonment, and simple tactics like denying him a typewriter or much library time, Mumia has not been silenced and he continues to write articles and essays on a wide range of political issues, all the while fighting for life. Other attempts to keep Mumia out of sight and out of mind have come from Philadelphia Fraternal Order of Police who successfully pressured the National Public Radio to cancel a series of 12 broadcasts by Mumia from death row. These fits also tried (but failed) to pressure publisher Addison-Wesley into stopping the publication of Mumia's new book Live From Death Row. Liberals who look for 'free speech' and 'rights' from the State and get upset when the toes of 'democracy' are trodden on, can learn loads from Mumia's case.

BLACK ACTIVISM: A DEADLY BUSINESS

It's not just political ranting when we say there is a State war on black radical organising. It's backed up by endless examples of concrete black attempts at empowerment and self-determination within black communities and in the U.S. in general. On the more covert level are the library's worth of documents uncovered from the F.B.I.'s Counterintelligence Program (COINTELPRO) initiated in the 60's against the Black Panther Party, showing national surveillance and harassment of black and white political activists, suppression of evidence in trials, the use of provocateurs and the spreading of disinformation to foment splits in radical organisations. In Mumia's hometown of Philadelphia alone, files were compiled on 18,000 people and 600 groups.

On a more blatant and sinister level is the assassination of black activists, exemplified by the murder of Illinois Black Panther Party leader Fred Hampton in 1968 shot to death by cops as he lay sleeping in his house, after being drugged by an informant. Fred Hampton is one of over 30 Black Panthers killed by the police since the B.P.P.'s inception in 1966. That's just another statistic in this article but think about it.

The case of Dhoruba Bin Wahad, a former leader of the New York Black Panthers can put Mumia Abu-Jamal's case into a wider political context and demonstrates the nature of COINTELPRO. Bin Wahad was convicted in 1971 for attempted murder of two cops and sentenced to 25 years. A hard fought federal civil rights action against the F.B.I. by Wahad's attorney resulted in the release of over 300,000 pages of COINTELPRO documentation exposing an extensive campaign to destroy the B.P.P. and - surprise, surprise - showing that evidence of Bin Wahad's innocence had been deliberately suppressed. In 1980, after spending nineteen years in prison for a 'crime' he did not do, the NY State court overturned his conviction and Bin Wahad walked free. His real crime - being a black activist.

RACIST FUCK WITH A DEADLY PEN

With such an interesting story, it's possible to get carried away with the intrigue. Coming back to reality (?), it is the life of Mumia Abu-Jamal that we now have to focus on. We have to spread as far and as wide as possible details of Mumia's case. The election in 1994 of death penalty lover Tom Ridge as Governor of Pennsylvania, a sicko who has already signed 5 death warrants ending Pennsylvania's 30 years without a State execution makes the situation urgent; the legal murder of Mumia is frighteningly close. It is necessary to set any dependency or political cynicism aside and to continue the protest for Mumia's life. If the death warrant is signed then we must take to the streets, fight for his life by all means necessary. We'll let American businesses and State administration offices over here know we won't stand for murder. Write to PDC, BCM Box 4986, London WC1N 3XX with your phone no. to be put on their phone tree for emergency demos. Please do what you can to save Mumia's life. International protest does help Mumia's case! You can write to Governor Tom Ridge, Main Capitol Bldg, RM 225, Harrisburg, PA 17120. USA or phone on (717) 783-1198, fax on (717) 783-1395 / (717) 787-7859.

It is vital that Mumia, who is confined to a cell every day except for 5 hours a week receives messages of support. Send him a card now! It'll cost you 41p in postage. JUSTICE FOR JOY?

The trial is also still going on (as we go to press) of 3 cops charged over the death of Joy Gardner. Joy, a 40 year old Jamaican woman, died in July 93 after immigration officers and police broke into her flat, strapped her into a body belt and taped her legs together and tapped her ear mouth. She developed brain damage and died. It is yet to be seen if anyone will be 'convicted'. Rarely are any officers of the state - cops, screws, immigration, squaddies in N. Ireland - charged, or if charged found guilty of murdering, framing up, beating up working class people, especially black people. Will the case be any different in Joy Gardner or Brian Douglas' case? We shouldn't expect justice from the state that kills us; we have to take it ourselves in both hands. Whatever their courts say, we won't forget.

CLASS WAR IN THE CLASSROOM

We reported in the last issue of confrontation that over 200 lecturers at Southwark College in London, were on strike against a package of compulsory redundancies being imposed by the management. The lecturers were given support from students and non-teaching workers, at the college and high participation on picket lines - inspiring given the strikers weren't getting strike pay. After two and a half weeks management backed down and agreed to a 10% pay increase in victory. The management agreed to remove the immediate threat of compulsory redundancies, improved their offer for voluntary redundancies, and to let the union see the financial reports which will show the need for cuts. As management haven't ruled out compulsory redundancies at a later date, the action has been 'suspended' and could be resumed, if and when they face further attacks. But with a strong organisation and a lot of solidarity (twenty grand was collected for the strikers) they're ahead on points after the first round.

Meanwhile ...

The NUT leadership are worried about their image, with the press screaming "Militant takeover" just because the "membership" managed to force them into a ballot (some time) for a one-day strike (some time, like in the holidays). In fact what happened was the two moderate left factions (STA and CDFU for arcjunksies) just bureaucratically getting it together enough to outvote the leadership. So the leadership has appointed a well known PR consultant to boost their fortunes. Tim Bell's previous successes include working for The D-day celebrations, President de Klerk, Royal Mail privatisation and David Mellor (while he was scoring for Chelsea).

SAOIRSE

Since the IRA declared a complete ceasefire on 31st August last year, there's been anything but peace in N. Ireland. While the atmosphere has definitely changed a lot, the British Army and the RUC are still seen as the enemy by many. Harass, beat up, and intimidate 'republicans' and try to recruit people as informers. At the same time, despite attempts by republicans to put the issue of political prisoners at the centre of the struggle, the vast majority of the political prisoners remain in jails around the world, mostly in the North of Ireland and the UK.

The organisation Saorise meaning 'Freedom' (in Gaelic) has been formed by friends and relatives of political prisoners. It is a voluntary organisation of all those held in jail as a result of the war in Ireland. This is their long-term aim, but as an immediate demand they are calling for all political prisoners to be transferred back to their own country.

A London-based Saorise group was set up in March. Get in touch, get involved. SAORISE are 210 + years. Contact Saorise, PO Box 100, London, NW5 1AR. Also see the Saorise website.

the greatest hackney rip-off..?

Hackney Council has decided to try to sell 19 large council estates across the Borough. This scam is called the 'Estate Regeneration Scheme' and involves transferring control of the estates to combinations of housing associations and private developers. The first many tenants knew about this was a letter through the door saying the head of housing was 'pleased to be able to tell you that the Council has decided to include your estate ...'. Gee, thanks - I should have stayed in bed.

While tenants will get to vote on the proposals, if the whole ERS goes through some 30% of Hackney's remaining council stock will have been sold off in one go. This is also at a time when almost 600 council homes are being demolished as part of the Dalston City Challenge.

The ERS is being sold as a way to do up estates which the Council has allowed to fall into disrepair. But the negative effects of transfer to a Housing Association are many:

Whose Benefit??

You can't have failed to notice the rumblings by the government about introducing new tougher benefits. Most notably: income support (for dolees) and unemployment benefit are to be replaced by Job Seekers Allowance, which will mean more money for those out of work for work; and Incapacity Benefit will replace sickness benefit. If you're a certain number of points, and you'll be assessed by their own scabby doctors (ex-Prison Medical Service perhaps). Industrial injuries payments to people injured at work have also been reduced. The attacks are only the latest in a long line of cuts and thievery of benefits over the last two decades. Job seekers allowance won't come in till next year, but is being piloted in some areas - Reading is one, anyone who's been on incapacity benefit is already being implemented. But it's not all being brought in without

- * Higher rents - a particular attack on low income waged workers.
- * Loss of secure tenancies - which make it easier to evict tenants.

But less well known are some of the other effects of being Housing association (HA) tenants:

* HAs are attempting to limit the number of children and poor people living in their estates [see the Guardian of 26/4/95]

* HAs are showing themselves to be very poor at responding to issues of racism and racist harrasment - The Newham Monitoring Project has said:

"we are faced with HAs which are more inaccessible, where power is more diffuse and where officials are more difficult to pin down ... many are new ... possessing neither the structures, skills or relevant experience to deal with racist harassment."
[NMP Annual Report 1994/5 pg 15]

While keeping the estates under council control is no solution - the threat to rents and security - not to mention the jobs of estate maintenance workers - is enough to choose the lesser of the two evils.

Nuclear Transport in Germany pushed through by 6000 cops

After more than 10 years of widespread resistance against the dumping of highly-radioactive burnt fuel rods onto a multi-million pound site near the north German town of Gorleben the so called 'Castor' container - heavily guarded by 6000 cops - arrived on the 25th April after a days journey from the Philippsburg nuclear power plant.

In an attempt to stop the transport from departing from the south German nuclear power plant, militant anti-nuclear activists sabotaged the railways in six different places leading to the interruption of rail services on all major north-south routes. Nationwide, metal 'anchors' were thrown across the overhead railway powerlines becoming entangled in the trains' current collectors, dragging the lines down over several miles and causing damage in excess of 500,000 DM. 100,000 commuters were late to work that morning. Shortly before the planned departure of the transport last summer, similar sabotage to roads and railways led to a last-minute political decision to stop it because of 'security risks'.

Although the protest didn't deter the environment secretary Angela Merkel from giving the go-ahead for the transport this time, the anti-nuclear movement has increased the political price for these transports dramatically. The security costs were more than 15 million which worries the nuclear industry as local county politicians want them to foot the bill instead of the taxpayers.

Despite the police declaring the whole district a no-go area, 3,000 demonstrators confronted the 125-ton cast-iron Custer container in the town of Dannenberg, 10 miles away from the Gorleben dump. Riot police beat and kicked protesters and used water cannons spraying a potentially lethal mix of water and CS-gas. Protest actions ranged from blocking roads with tractors and cars, building burning barricades, bomb scares along the train lines and dismantling rail tracks, to arson attacks on the federal office of 'radiation protection' in Salzgitter. After a five-hour battle for only 10 miles of road the first Custer container, with its cargo of 9 dead-burnt nuclear rods, was moved to Gorleben. The bastards are now trying to say to the Germans: 'We are now trying to save the world. We are now trying to claim money to cover the security costs. These money transports are due this year if they can afford it.'

Well done to all those who were there. Keep up the fight !!!

p.s. The Gorleben dump is supposed to receive more nuclear waste from the Sellafield processing plant, which is transported by rail through London and across the channel. There's a lot to do.....

WOMEN FIGHT BACK

As a new feature in contraFLOW we're starting a regular column dedicated to true stories of personal, heroic 'fight back' experiences of women in London. There's all sorts of things that can be said about why it's important to hear such stories, to spend space on our 'little' victories, but I don't want. Just read and be inspired. And if you're a woman who has a tale of a shitty situation you were in that you got yourself out of, whether that be telling off a misogynist boss at work or thwarting a rape attempt or finally getting it together to leave an abusive lover - and I believe every woman has such stories of incredible strength and heroism - write to 'K.M.' c/o contraFLOW and I'll try to publish what you send. You can also be phoned to tell your story if you'd rather, and you can always remain anonymous. Stay strong, keep fighting.

"Last October I left my friend's house in Camberwell around nine at night and headed for home. It was quite dark that Sunday night but the streets were well lit and I knew the route really well. At some point, right when I was near Burgess Park, a guy passed me and crossed the street. I didn't recall anything of it except for my regular sense of caution I always feel when I'm walking alone. As I got near the corner, all of the sudden and the sound of keys rattling as if someone was running toward me. I saw a young man who had just grabbed a bag at my feet. He was wearing a white t-shirt and jeans, he had curly brown hair; it was the same guy who had been sitting on the grass next to me at the park. I had him in mind and waited for my approach. I screamed "NO!" real loud, then immediately sat down on the ground, which happened to be directly under a streetlamp. I yelled "Fuck off! and I don't think the guy anticipated my reaction, judging by the look on his face. All those things I did were just automatic, completely instinctual. The guy took off. It was wierd because in the brief moment before he grabbed me, when I still saw him running toward me, I felt intuitively told he meant trouble. I thought, 'I've never seen this guy before, why would he want to hurt me?' But in that moment, I knew I had to do something to defend myself. Immediately afterward I got up and took a taxi home but I was completely just filled with rage and anger. I totally sensed that this young guy was a rapist in the making."

Wow. Maybe not now, now that he had to deal with Elizabeth who did not play passive as most rapists desire. Thanks.

FEATHERS FLY!★

Those of us who work on this paper have long felt that there's been a large void in contraFLOW when it comes to writings of the personal. Some freak out about it, thinking that personal politics are too 'lifestyl' in nature - but there are more serious battles to fight like surging global capitalism, right? - but most of us believe that to separate the two, 'serious' politics from personal politics, is silly and even politically naive.

Do we really believe that the personal shit that makes all of this so difficult is going to magically disappear when the state toples? Such ideas are foolish.

So I had the opportunity to spend six hours recently talking with Diana Pollard from the London Fat Women's Group about these issues and fate, in what was supposed to be an interview on the politics of fat and fat phobia for the paper. Instead our interview turned out to be a highly charged and emotional one I thought, so the result here is more of a mish-mash of just a few of the things we talked about. But like most issues, I think, the politics of fat and body acceptance are both highly personal and highly externally political, so I've written off as much as I can from one of the other. The last few weeks I've spent on this issue have been intense, zillions of questions arising from discussions with friends and co-horts on beauty, attraction, insecurity and their social construction. I hope you give this some thought.

Diana is a self-defined radical who has been involved in activism since the Vietnam War. She's the founder of Rotunda Press, which published the British edition of Shadow on a Tightrope: Writings by Women on Fat Oppression, an amazing book telling the stories of fat women, who they've struggled and survived in a fat-phobic society, and confronting fat myths and fat hatred that runs rampant in western society. She runs the Body Image Factory which does workshops for women on improving body image and finally, she has been a member of the London Fat Women's Group since 1989. The London Fat Women's Group is one of a couple of groups in the country working to expose and change fat phobia; members aim to turn around fat stereotypes, support others in dieting and educate people in the health and education professions - whose wrongful attitudes can be highly damaging - on fat health and sensitivity.

"We're a social group too," said Diana, "and in a sense we're a more radical version of it than the other groups working on this issue. My own personal interest is in 'Body Acceptance' - and I mean acceptance of all body shapes and sizes. But other groups, such as Diet Breakers, are more interested in losing fat for size 6, saying it's ridiculous for size 6, size 10 is the goal for fat women because we're not built like that, and instead maybe size 16 should be a more realistic goal. For me that doesn't go far enough. I want complete acceptance for everyone, I don't just want the gap widened for what's acceptable."

In preparation for this interview I read Diana's Shadow, and was filled with rage and pain from reading the different women's stories. I often wrote of my own experiences of pain inflicted by friends, family, lovers and strangers telling them they're ugly, lazy, lacking in self-control, stupid - all those things thin oriented society had taught us to believe. Fat people have had (and still do) things thrown at them, get spit on, set denied work because they're considered unattractive to look at. I'm on and on. Some women wrote of going clothes shopping and never finding things their size, etc.

ing, every woman striving to have a body like Cindy Crawford or Naomi Campbell (which is just not POSSIBLE, not a physical possibility for 95% of the female population), instead of being joyful in what she is, is a woman who hates her body, hates herself. You can't separate the two. What I'm dying to know is, after the glorious revolution will we all be thin? Will I be 5'8"?

Sitting down to write this all has been incredibly difficult for me. I think primarily because of how close to home it hits. I am a non-fat, very fit and healthy woman who - I found out while doing this - diets. I watch what I eat, drink only diet pop and exercise regularly because I do not want to get fat. I don't like my body. Even more so I don't like my face. I think I should look like the latest models in the Face. I've convinced myself that my partner would like me better if I did and I'm convinced my life would be infinitely easier if I did. People would listen to me more. I'd get what I want more easily. I am also a political militant and as much of a radical feminist as one can be in a post-feminist world. I think the media images of women, the pressure to be thin and model beautiful sucks. I reject it and am torned by it simultaneously. And I know I'm not alone. Last night I talked about this stuff with a couple other contraflowers, one of whom is really struggling with issues of inadequacy, feeling he is unattractive compared to others (he's not, he's very attractive), who worries about his natural odours, people come out with him instead of telling them off or actually talk to them about what they said and what was wrong about it - and I don't mean morally wrong, I mean factually incorrect - you can change things. Like understand why you can't easily thin that, but...

For me, most painful of all of this was learning about the intense level of self-hatred and self-loathing experienced by people who are fat (and then others, which I'll get to). People (or persons) wouldn't think of a fat person as a person, they'd see a side, of never being able to look at themselves in the mirror, because it was all too painful. But the summation is that it is not that fat itself is the cause, the problem is that it is. It's society's hatred of fat, the hatred that makes people miserable, that's the problem.

I found it interesting, disgusting mostly, that I got more than a few crap jokes about doing this article and interview with Diana, fat jokes from activist comrades. So I wondered, why is it acceptable that 'right-on'ers (ugh) give shit about people's bodies, but we (I'm assuming as non-fat persons) wouldn't think of doing the same about skin colour, class or sex? Why are some oppressions OK but not others. In fact, leftists have always used fat as a symbol of the oppressor - 'fat capitalists', 'pigs'. It's because this people still view fat as a choice (as non-fat people can also lose weight), our fat hatred, our ideas that bodies view it as lack of personal control, think it's a result of self-indulgence and that fat people are weak.

What is acknowledged is that the thin ethos which underlies fat hatred is a white middle class one to begin with. It doesn't acknowledge that there are cultures for whom fat is considered beautiful, a sign of health, power and strength. Likewise, not acknowledging is that the thin ethos is a economic sphere - and there are more people of colour the lower one goes - the more fat people there are, thus fat negativity hits the poor and non-white with a particular vengeance. Enough, our fat hatred, our ideas that bodies are supposed to look exactly a very narrowly defined way, is a decisive attack on, is most hard felt by women. "All women," Diana insists, "have issues around body image. Not a woman exists who doesn't want to change something about her body."

ing, every woman striving to have a body like Cindy Crawford or Naomi Campbell (which is just not POSSIBLE, not a physical possibility for 95% of the female population), instead of being joyful in what she is, is a woman who hates her body, hates herself. they've unconsciously or consciously justified their joking, and understand that whether fat through nature or nurture, people deserve to be treated with equal respect. To me, it's the base of our anarchist politics.

As Diana said, I want people to know and understand that there are as many variations of body types as there are people and not one of them is 'correct', every one is of absolutely the same value and respect as any other. I want a continual celebration of diversity. I want this all so understood that I can even apply it to myself.

Moving toward a society that has full body acceptance is probably about as difficult as any of our other struggles. It's all a slow process. In our discussion Diana suggested that we be brutally honest to ourselves and internalised stereotypes of fat people (they're lazy, ugly, asexual...) and choose to actively contradict them. Part of that, she said, actually getting to know fat people and all sorts of people who are different from oneself - encouraging them into one's life. Once one feels that one can actually get to know it becomes much harder to cause them harm.

Likewise, we should not be afraid to confront fat and body negativity when we hear it, just like we confront racism or sexist remarks, and not because this is the 'p.c.' thing to do but because we know in our hearts it's right. We can try and re-programme our brains to find the beauty in people who might not normally try to with. Lastly, something I strongly believe, is that we can support our friends in their personal struggles with these issues, let them know we're on the same side as they are, genuinely compliment them as they deserve. (When was the last time you did this?)

This article represents -literally- about 1/20th of all the things Diana and I discussed in our time together. I'm sad to have cut out so much, about sexuality, about fat health, about men's experiences with this issue, about patriarchy and competition between women, about the gay liberation movement, about how to politically approach the issue of extremes of fat (when fat becomes a disability), and on and on. I can't believe I have had one Diana and I have leaving out so many of the important things she said. However, if you are interested in receiving copies of Shadow on a Tightrope, which covers all of these things and is a fantastic book, you can get them for £7.95 incl. postage from Rotunda Press, BM Box 207, WCLIN 3XX. You can also find out about the Body Image Factory through the same address, addressed to the B.I.M. If you're interested in the London Fat Women's group, the group meets every first Wednesday of the month at 7pm at the London Women's Centre on Wild Court, Holborn. Copies of their newsletter are available through the above address for £2.50/yr, four issues.

* Finally, on August 13, in a fun celebration of food and eating, the London Fat Women's Group is sponsoring a picnic for members and supporters on Sunday, August 13. The picnic is gathering at 2pm at the Serpentine Gallery, Hyde Park, and people are asked to bring non-diet foods to share.

SPACE INVADER NEWS

The Do It Yourself anti CIA movement has been going on the offensive lately - going out and taking space, doing what we're not supposed to, instead of just protesting.

On April 23rd a few hundred took a site near St Georges Hill, Surrey, scene of the Diggers first camp in 1601. The group were protesting against the CIA, which is now occupied by some millionaire's golf course. Despite threatening noises from chief cops beforehand, they turned out totally fluffy.

THIS STUDIO IS YOURS

On May 5th a load of road protesters took the stage live on TV after getting pissed off with the patronising bleatings of host Richard Littlejohn and some Tory MP complaining about activists on the dole. It seems they gave a fine performance, but didn't impress the TSG who were waiting outside and laid in guard.

On VE Day a couple of hundred protesters took Stonehenge to party for the day, and ask where's this freedom the war was meant to have won us? Meanwhile SQUASH took a tube station platform and dumped loads of rubbish there, getting the thousands of commuters who were coming out to stop them, squatted tube stations during air raids in WW2 and the massive squatter movement immediately after the war, which saw 100s of people occupying empty houses and army barracks.

May 14th saw a big action of Reclaim the Streets, a street party at Camden Lock. Rather a soft target considering the masses of consumers who normally block the whole area, and we are stopping cars just to allow the expansion of the market? But three hundred people moving through the tubes to take a street was a great feeling. After most people had pissed off, though, the Old Bill, who had been observed running around like headless chickens (it's rumoured they had expected sixty people, and weren't prepared for the size of the demo) waded in hard and nicked ten people, putting three in hospital. One passer-by was nicked coming out of a chip shop, after he innocently pointed out to the fob how bad cars were for our health, and asked why he was being stopped. The demo's head to the pavement. The Legal Defence and Monitoring group managed to trace most of the arrestees, and support is being offered for those facing charges, including affray and threatening behaviour. Anyone who witnessed any of the arrests or who pleases get in touch with the LDNG, Tel 0181 862 9804, or write to BM Box Haven, London, WCLIN 3XX.

WRONG KIND OF PARTY

Meanwhile the Coalition against the CIA called a national demo the day before Mayday, and despite lack of publicity word got round enough to bring out over three thousand people. The Coalition has been concentrating on building a paper front of organisations that pass motions, a front that the Socialist Workers Party can wheel out when they want, and drop like they've been dismantled. The Coalition has been asked to drop all their other fronts in the past. This doesn't mean that we should ignore organisations that we should regard as real workers at coordinating across the country and getting out of their pockets. The parties have the resources and the troops to get round and get seen, but without necessarily doing anything.

Good news from Maidstone where nearly half of a Kent Coalition demo got nicked in January supporting 3 punt buses nicked under the Act. The CPS have been dropping all the charges, showing up the heavy-handed cop tactics - respect to the 34 for standing together and refusing deals.

By the way - just 'cause your event isn't here doesn't mean we don't like you - please send us details - especially for events in September - by 25/7/95 - to the calendar compilers

GLOBAL SHORTS

CENTRE CRISIS - The London Rape Crisis Centre has had its funding stopped after 15 years of vital work. The decision, by the London Borough Grants Committee, was taken without discussion or a year to keep the place open. The Centre Appeal line for more info is 0171 916 5666.

WARNING - People in Post Office uniforms are caught up offguard. Careless talk can cost money!

15 Years of Resistance in Newham

The Newham Monitoring Project is now 15 years old - their annual report is a valuable local study of fighting racism in east London - particularly in the way it links housing, education and anti policing case work with campaigning and fighting fascists - showing how anti-fascism means far more than justifying the most blatant bastards (though OK for CWO) - see article on page 4 (avail. from 382 Katherine Rd KT ph 0181 552 6284)

AGAINST SLAVERY - The Chaitsegar Women's Organisation (CWO) in Madhya Pradesh, India, have been fighting for over a decade against bonded labour, which means slavery for whole families on the basis of debts that never get payed off. Bonded labour is officially abolished but without groups like the CWO there would be nobody doing anything about it. To be more effective in a large rural area, CWO are trying to get a leap and an illegal leap has been launched by the Friends of CWO who can be contacted on 0171 837 7509.

TURKEY WARZONE - The Turkish state has been fighting resistance on all fronts, on the streets of the capital, repressing (sometimes with bombs) any criticism in the media, and militarily against the Iraqi border against Kurdish fighters based there.

On March 12th a gang of state-sponsored gunmen attacked five tea houses in the working class Gazl Osman Pasa neighbourhood of Istanbul, killing one 67 year old and injuring many more. Thousands took to the streets to protest and were met by troops who opened fire at point blank range. Demonstrations and repression continued for the next days with many killed. Counter Defence Committees set up to organise resistance and demands spreading across the country. The events have been portrayed as between different Islamic groups but the reality is working class anger against state repression. One of the people nicked was a Mr Hasam Osman. Despite numerous witnesses, the cops deny any knowledge and have effectively discredited him. There have been hunger strikes in London and other cities to force the state to open - contact 0171 275 8655 for info.

According to the Minister of Defence there are 250,000 deserters from the Turkish Army. There is a War Resisters Association (SKD) fighting the militaristic, genocidal and racist policy of the state, with 14 serving 3 year prison sentences for refusal to serve.

STATE DEATH SQUADS CONFIRMED - the bodies of 2 Basque activists, kidnapped in 1983 by the cop-connected GAL have finally been found and identified. The remains show that they had been tortured for months before being brought to death. A few days after their kidnapping, the Guardia Civil carried out mass arrests on organisations the two had been involved with - coincidence? Investigations have shown that GAL was effectively a secret QAnon group, under the reign of the Spanish socialist party. The latest discovery led to general strikes and violent clashes with the 'autonomous' Basque police force. (Molotov)

REGISTRATION FOR "SEXUAL DEVIANTS"

The legislature in Montana USA is moving to pass a law that would require those convicted of crimes, including those done under their repressive sexual laws, register for life with the cops. Their laws criminalise any sexual contact between members of the same sex with punishment of up to 10 years prison and fines up to $50,000. The current move puts lesbian and gays on a par with rapists and murderers. (Arm the Spirit)

Armed Struggle for Aotearoa

The meeting of the Asian Development Bank in Auckland in early May was met with a declaration of armed struggle by radical Maoist activists to engage in armed struggle to oppose the privatisation of resources in New Zealand. The bank meeting was chosen to warn of overseas capital with promises to blow up dams or burn down forests. The bank meeting was chosen to warn of overseas capital with promises to blow up dams or burn down forests. The bank meeting was chosen to warn of overseas capital with promises to blow up dams or burn down forests.

The state authorities have indicated that they will use intervention and or sedition laws to repress these actions.
