Wage-Plug:

I didn't know, your Worship, I'd committed an offence;

I s'pose that's 'cause us workin' stiffs is iggerant an' dense.

I den't know what this min'um is, **Tennin' that it's small;

I don't know what this min'um is, exceptin' that it's small; still, as his Worship' simuates, we might set none at all.

Now what I wants to tell this Court is that we likes the best;
Instead of starvin' children, an' a missus not 'arf dressed;

From what I learns, an' reads, an' hears, an' sees 'most every day, Us men what works makes everything which you coves takes away.

We builds hotels an' mansions, which we never goes inside;

we never goes inside;
An' railway trains, an' motor cars,
on which we never ride.

on which we never ride.

We manufacture silks an' wools, an' fal-de-lals, an' such—

Satus, laces, julery, our missuses don't touch.

We grows the tucker—fixes it—we cooks up all the grub—

An' then our kids goes hungry, please your Worship. That's the rub!

rub!
OUR tucker's leavin's, scraps an'

An' never has a decent rag to put upon our backs. e
An' now they sends me up to you to get a min'um wage,

While you gets forty quid a week.
Let's put it on the stage.
Constable:

Don't you know that his Worship must not be perturbed? There's a lot on his mind, and that mind you've disturbed.

I have half a mind to charge you with contempt,

But, being somewhat biassed, you're exempt.

The Bosses' Little Idea. Patriotic !! Oh Yes !!

The "Weekly Trade Report." the organ of the Merchants and Traders' Association of Australasia, which, by the way, is published at two bob a copy, in its issue of May 31st, gives us an eyeopener on our masters' patrictic outlook and their benevolent intentions towards their patriotic slaves

Referring to the difficulties of "cap-turing German trade," it has the fol-lowing, quoted from "Kemp's Ga-zette":—

"Notwithstanding all this, however, there are some trades in which we might compete successfully, if we would but make the needful changes in our methods. In the smaller and cheaper kinds of goods, such as glass and china ornaments, children's toys, and the like, there is room for a vast and the like, there is room for a vast manufacture. But, here, the wages question is supreme. This is work that could, and should be done by women and boys and girls, who could readily be taught, and would quickly learn, and whose pay would be less than that of men. In this matter, however, we have set up a legislative barbed wire fencing under the Factory and similar Acts, which in many ways hampers the freedom of the ways hampers the freedom of the manufacturer, and of those who are willing to work for him at low wages and for long hours."

The article goes on to state that the war itself is an "Economic Force" which will assist in solving the problem of cheap labor, and "that whatever the unions may do, and notwithstanding any paper guarantees given, employment can, and will, never be the same again."

It will be noticed that these industrial and commercial Huns, in their heart to heart talks with each other through their two bob press; do not indulge in any sentimental balderdash about the war being a national or patriotic affair, "a war of Freedom against Militarism," and dope of a similar kind which their penny press consistently dish up for working class consistently dish up for working class digestion. Not on your life! Tho war to this fraternity is an "Economic Force," which helps them to solve the question of the exploitation of juvenile It will be noticed that these indusquestion of the exploitation of juvenile and female labor, women, boys and girls, who are "willing" to work from dawn to dark for whatever this human brood of vampires may in their munifi-cence offer them.

In contempt for the methods of trade unionism, which in its sectional, narrow and biassed outlook, ignores the organisation of this kind of labor, these gentry are obtanced. these gentry are outspoken enough to declare that "employment can, and will, never be the same again," and this, mark you, "nowthistanding any paper guarantees given!"

is very evidently not a German

The delusion of the patriotic bonehead the victim of lying economic and poli-tical scoundrels, who rushes off to the front in the belief that the defeat of front in the belief that the defeat of the Germans and the "capture of Ger-man trade" will result in fremunerative employment for himself, here receives a rude shock. The great Captuins of Industry and public-spirited citizens" who subscribe to patriotic funds, drink the soldiers' "health" in champagne and wish him God speed with their lips, have deep down in their hearts, the desire, fostered by inhuman greed, that he shall leave his bones on the battle-fields of Europe, so that economic ne-fields of Europe, so that economic nehe shall leave his bones on the battle-fields of Europe; so that economic ne-cessity may render his wife, sisters or other dependants the obedient slaves of godless profit-mongers.

If anybody should say that this is too drastic a conclusion to draw from the above quotations, then the English Ianguage has no meaning!

The writer recently listened to a lecture by Mr. Meredith Atkinson, of the Workers' Educational Association, in which that gentleman put it forward as his belief that the development of a "social conscience" brought about by "soc.al conscience" brought about by the sufferings of all classes in the war would result in a better understanding between master and worker, and aome-thing of a social regeneration. The development of a "social conscience" would certainly appear to be a very rapid growth so far as the master class is concerned, but its tendency is scarce-ly in the direction Mr. Atkinson would-have the worker's believe. have the workers believe.

That "conscience" has its roots deep in the economic foundations of society, that even if its expression were society, that even if its expression were not so clearly put forward in the "Weekly Trade Report," it ought to be evident from past experience that any temporary psychological aberrations that may be produced by the war, will prove incupable of modifying it. While labor is content to remain a com-modity it is a foolish dream for the modity it is a foolish dream for modity it is a foolish dream for the workers to expect the capitalist class workers to expect the capitalist alaas to adopt any other viewpoint towards riv than that exhibited towards other commodities whose purchase is contem-plated, namely, to buy as cheap as pos-sible, by book or by crook, by "fair" means or foul, and—"notwithstanding any paper guarantees given."

What is going to be the workers' au-swer to this bold declaration of their exploiters? The future only can tell; but one thing is saie to prophesy. The happy hunting ground contemplated by the Merchants and Traders' Associa-tion of Australasia is sure to be arrived tion of Australasia is sure to be arrived at if the workers do not adopt new methods of organisation, new tactics in accordance therewith, and declare war on exploitation as boldly as their masters have declared in favour of it.

Vain dreams of the "development of a social conscience," efforts to harmon-ise by arbitration or other methods interests in their very nature antagonis-tic, may afford scope for the energy of reformers, politicians and other philan-thropically disposed people; but if the workers are not to degenerate into barbarism, a militant organisation, having no illusions as to the masters' intenno ilusions as to the masters' inten-tions, ready to adopt all methods ethi-eal or unethical, legal or illegal, and that "notwithstanding any paper guarantees given," is an absolute ne-

The "Sun's" Economics.

The 'know all' propensities of the average scribe in the capitalist sheets is amazing. The "Sun" in its "War Notes" of June 1st takes the pig-head-Notes" of June 1st takes the pig-head-ed militarists of the German general staff to task for their "mistakes" in military strategy in the western thea-tre of war. The cocksureness of this military critic would lead one to believe that if the German plan of campaign laid in his hands, things would indeed be looking blue for the Allies. It is really time that the censor stepped in and put this pen-pusher on the "Sun" and put this pen-pusher on the "Sun" out of business for his bare-faced suggestions to the Germans on how to use feat their enemies.

On somewhat similar lines, the "Sun" on the following day comes out with a leading article giving, of course, dismetrested advice to the workers on the ca' canny doctrine and other methods which interfere with the rapid performance. ance of the work of the community"; only that altruistic spirit which charac-terises the "Sun's" advice to the Ger-man generals is here more prominently put forward.

The "Sun" is horrified to find that "men" in the labour ranks are cutting the throats of their own class" when they adopt any methods which savours of interference with that latest pet scheme of up-to-date exploiters known as "Industrial Efficiency." This is so plain to the "Sun's" economist that he clarifies the workers' ideas on the matclarines the workers' ideas on the mat-ter by "a simple arithmetical fact" which, while it has no relation to eco-nome facts as they exist, is at all events worthy of the same considera-tion as the German General Staff will, no doubt, give to the "Sun's" military genius.

The "arithmetical fact" discovered by the "Sun" is as follows:-

If for £1000 (apart from labour) the capital of the community can produce something worth £2000, there is £1000 from labour and capital to draw from in the proportions they may agree upon in their incessant dispute. But if the product is only worth £1500, only the balance of £500 remains for division."

You will notice that the "Sun," in ferentially, draws a happy picture of the boss and his workers going over the former's books at the end of a given former's books at the end of a given period and fixing the wages in accordance with the accumulated profits. It will also be noticed that the "Sun" assumes capital to be THE factor in the production of wealth, and the further assumption that the worker's wages is paid AFTER his product is disposed of, and not before, is another remarkable thing about the "Sun's" arithmetical fact."

If the economic genius responsible for this discovery will only attend the L.W.W. economic/class for five minutes of one evening, it will be demonstrated to his satisfaction, or his chagrin, according to his psychological make-up, that the worker's wages is determined by economic laws which have nothing to do with the value, large or small, of the commodity he is paid to produce. Portion of the £1000 capital, supposed by the "Sun" is capital employed in the payment of labor, and the value which that labor produces being, then, merely potential, the "Sun's" little picture of master and worker "cutting up" the value in the proportions they may agree is neither an arithmetical up" the value in the proportions they may agree is neither an arithmetical fact nor a fact of any other kind. The workers' wages is, first of all, determined by the cost of the means of subsistence, and his standard of living rises or falls in accordance with the law of supply and demand in the labor market and the economic pressure which he excites the work organization with his ercises through organisation with his fellows. He feels instinctively that his fellows. He feels instinctively that his wages has no relation whatever to his total, product, and he knows, if he is intelligent, that any diminution of his intelligent, that any diminution of his for which there is a demand will result in the employment of "extra hands," Absorbs rendering competition. thereby rendering competition less keen, with the resultant tendency toards the raising of his own standard Accepting the "Sun's" formula, who Accepting the "Sun's" formula, whether the value which he adds to the raw material be £1000 or £500, it will not add to or diminish by one cent the wages which he has already drawn for the expenditure of his labor energy. A threat of lessening that £1000 to £500, or the £500 to £250 by sabotage, ca' canny or other methods, is the one thing which the master class fear; hence, the uneasiness of the "Sun" and the modern cry that "Industrial £65-

Dear Comrade,—Your kind letter from the 20th February last to hand, with great delay.

We are exchanging with "Direct Action," Sydney, and am sure that Comrade Owen is sending the Editor his English journal.

We are glad to know that our fellow-workers there are for Direct Action to the marrow of their bones. Fine! That is what is needed if we ever want to become emancipated.

Pleading-time must be gone for good; it is no use to beg for bread and to get a cracked head instead. We must return blow for blow, if possible, give more of them than we receive, if we must accomplish anything anything.

We are watching with great in-terest the growth of the L.W.W. in Australia, and as you inform us,

YOUR KING AND COUNTRY NEEDS YOU

"Your King and Country Needs You" is the cry that greets you on every side, but how many times have you needed your King and country. When the landlord comes for his rent (for letting you live in your country), and you have none to pay, when he has you evicted, and you find that the workhouse is the only place left for you, when your children cry for bread, or when in desperation you steal a loaf for them, and you are given when your chindren ear too. It is a common or when in desperation you steal a loaf for them, and you are given three months' hard labor, when on coming out of prison you find every man's hand against you, when you —. But why go on? How many thousands of times do you need your King and country, and what do they do for you then? Your King and country need you. What bitter irony!!

ciency" makes for the well-being of the worker. It is the old cry in a new guise, "the longer and harder you work the more I shall be able- to pay," But these shining economic lights forget that many stages in industrial efficiency have been reached in the last half century; the individual productivity of the labourer has gone up a hundred-fold, yet he is still on his "three meals and a flop" with a tray bit for the pictures thrown in for good bellarour. That is an historical and an economic fact which the "Sun" is recommended to place beside its "arithmetical", proposition by way of comparison. I fear that the tendency of the economic laws underlying the capitalist system of production to harmonise with the arithmetical calculations and proconceived notions of an ink-slinger on the "Sun" is just about on a par with the anxiety of the German Generals on that paper's adverse comment on their military strategy.

The "Sun' economist, like its nuli-tary expert, is, after all, no doubt worthy of "his place in the sun;" he is certainly making a bold bid to earn his salary in the present capitalist order of things. From North America.

(The following letter has been e-ceived by the General Secretary-Treasurer from Wm. D. Haywood, General Secretary-Treasurer of the American Administration, Industrial Workers of the World.—Ed.):—

164-6 W. Washington-street, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A., May 5th, 1915.

Fellow-worker,

Your letter of the 4th April to hand. As to literature published in the Italian and Slavonic languages, the Italian and Slavonic languages, we have several pamphlets, but scarcely any leaflets, published in other than the English tongue. You will see by the list in "Solidarity" that there are several papers of the organisation published in what we are pleased to call foreign languages. These papers issue from time to time leaflets and pamphlets of their pwn as well as translate the of their own as well as transla English literature into their inslate the language.

Me have the constitution in Polish and Italian. The "General Strike," which is a speech made by me on time in New York, has also been translated into these languages, also a debate by Fellow-worker Jos. J. Ettor with one Caroti, then an A.F. of L. organiser, now a member of of L. organiser, now a member of the Italian Parliament.

I will make up a bundle of about twenty-five of each of them and send, them on to you. You can then have them reprinted there, or we can fill your orders for any amount from this side.

It is interesting to learn about the Chinese fellow-worker who has translated the pamphlet of St. John's "I.W.W. History," and run he same in his paper in Burma. It will soon be that the sun will never set on the Industrial Workers-of the World.

This incident puts me in mind of something that I learned during my last trip to Victoria, B.C. Three Chinese fellow-workers there had left for China and had taken with them an American fellow-worker by the name of Margin to creatise in then an American fellow-worker by the name of Harris to organise in cana. What success he met with I have not learned. We have sev-eral locals on the coast, among their membership are Asiatics of the different countries.

On April 15th there was held a Conference in Kansas City, Nio., of the harvest workers, who organised what is known as an Agricultural Workers' Organisation of the Industrial Workers of the World. dustrial Workers of the World. This is the outcome of several years' agitation throughout the middle states and Canada. They will appoint at least 100 organisers, who will work with the crews during the harvest. This movement means a greater campaign of agitation and a wider distribution of literature than has over before been greaterished. wider distribution of literature than has ever before been accomplished. There is also more activity among the steel workers than for some time past. The Amalgamated Association affiliated with the American Federation of Labor decayed and rumbled up. It was controlled by the highly-paid and skilled men and some sub-contractors. Now the workers are organising into the L.W.W., where they can manage their own affairs in their own interest and in the interest of their class.

Was pleased to learn of the splendid work being done by the I.W.W. throughout Australia. It is an imperishable idea, the hope of the working class. With best wishes, perishanie .... working class. W I am,

Labor is Suspicious.

The main fact about the temper of a great body of working people is that it is tull of suspicion. This that it is tull of suspicion. is that it is full of suspicion. This is the inheritance amongst thinking people of generations or struggle. But there is a special element in the suspiciousness of very many of the younger workmen. They do not merely suspect the employer. They suspect Parliament, and they suspect their leaders. This is all part of the disconcinturate of the leaders. of the disappointments of the last few years. If we are to understand the present situation, we must re-member the laws that makes it posmember the laws that makes it possible to prosecute working men for such offences as sedition. The growing suspiciousness of labor and its increasing determination to no longer rest content with being told wnat is good for it, and what is bad, is one which has to be faced. By the master and the State, nobly assisted by the Labor leaders and trade union officials, it will be met by persuasive overtures, appeals to sentiment and patriotism and by compromise, and when all these lail they will resort to armed force or brutal promise, and when all these lail they will resort to armed force or brutal coercion. But the worker, who alone knows the aspirations and needs of the worker, will meet it in a different way. We must loster this spirit of revolt among our workmates, for only by revolting against certain conditions can a change be made. We must focus the suspicion, and creat its intrifference by weepers. and prove its justification by exposand prove its justification by exposure of the treachery and cunning of the suspects, and extend the knowledge of the power we possess when consciously directed, and must endeavor to direct that power against the things that really mater. It is indeed a healthy sign that men can be found who will strike at the power appears to expression. against the tinings that really matmen can be found who will strike at a time when appeals to patriotism overshadow all else, and whilst a truce (entered into by the leaders with the masters) is supposed to exist in the trade union world. The men are beginning to suspect their leaders, and more, they are suspecting the State and capitalism, and authoritarianism in all its forms in England. The Clyde dispute is but one instance. In Birkenhead the gas workers struck for an increase of wages, and the town was put into darkness. There is a growing uneasiness in the coalfields, in the docks, among the postal workers and many other industries. Concessions have been made to the railway men and other workers, which Risks may have to be undertaken, but the may have to be undertaken, but he issue at stake is worth all or nothing. Let us put our backs to the wall, and when we find the tyrang of the bosses, the State and its agents, militarism, becoming too great, stir up the latent fire of rolt, and fight either by striking or other means which shall be expedient and effective. We are suspicious, and will remain so, for we ent and effective. We are suspi-ious, and will remain so, for wit know full well that the capitalist is ever and only seeking to secure himself always at our expense. The war will see the end of many things, and not least should be our quiet submission.

The I. W. W. in Perth.

Nearing the Perth Esplanade last Sunday afternoon I encountered a port-ly well-dressed citizen in evident dis-tress. The massive watch-guard looped tress. The massive watch-guard looped across the vast expanse of snowy waist-coat enclosing his lower chest, the silk umbrella, and get-up in general, bespoke a man who had done well by his umbrella, and get-up in general, bespoke a man who had done well by hespoke a man who had done well by hesountry. Although apparently but of middle age, and more than well nourshed, he walked feebly and uncertainly. His neck, protected from the chill caress of the river breeze by voluminous folds of fat, was a deep and angry red. He gazed vacantly at the passer-by, and has pendulous lips moved spasmodically, but no sound issued from them. As I was passing he reeled and would have fallen but for my restraining arm. He leant heavily against, and breathed gratefully over, me. A faint smell of whisky dispelled a hardly formed doubt. Had he been "stung" the aroma from a cargo necessary to cause a list on such a seasoned vessel a his richly-tinted probaces is proclaimed him to be, would have blistered the uncovered portions of my anatomy.

"Steady, neighbour," I admonished him. "Are you feeling unwell?"

"Club," he mutiered. "Club, Wel" 5 Club. Weld Club. "Right, take it it's only a few steps from here," I assured him. As we neared that aristocratic haunt he started talking disjointedly. "Outrageous, pestilent fellow, menace to society, preposterous ideas, inflame the minds of the work-ers" Imagining that he was mentally rehearsing a speech I refrained from interrupting him. A group of well-groomed gentlemen were chatting to the occupants of a motor car as we reached the club's portals. "Good Heavens, Sproggs," exclaimed a rotund individual, inspectseahimed a rotund individual, inspecting -my companion through a goldmounted monocle. "What on earth is the matter?" Sproggs recovered rapidly when surrounded by friendly and familiar faces, and forsaking my supporting shoulder, burst farth indignantly, "Matter enough, while you fellows are gassin' here, a pestilent agitater down there is undermining the foundations of society." Sproggs waved a soft podgy hand towards the Esed a soft podgy hand towards the Es-planade, and all eyes turned in that direction, as the cheers and laughter of a sizable crowd were heard applauda sizable crowd were heard applauding some point the "pestilent fellow had made.

A man seated in the motor laughed, and a tall member of the little group spoke soothingly to the enraged Sproggs. "My dear fellow, we must allow freedom of speech. It is one of the best safety-valves for discontent "be verkers." "Yes," assented "Sproggs". among the workers." "Yes," assented another, "and the most these Socialist chaps can do is to get a change of Go-rerment." They all grinned at this, except Sproggs. "Pah," snorted that savey sproggs. "Pan," snorted that irate individual, "this is no silly Socialist, the cursed fellow is telling the people to have nothing to do with politicians. He advises them, since they ticians. He advises them, since they cannot use the Government as we do, cannot use the Government as we do, to organise into One. Big. Union. and take what they want, instead of asking politicians to get it for them." "But where are the police?" asked the votund one, "why don't"—""Tchahl you and your police," rudely interrupted Sproggs. "what will be the good of police when this One Big Union gets Comp. and the workers are organised. going, and the workers are organised as we are. Sprogg's business train-ing had evidently taught him to fore-east conditions under dertain gue-circumstances. "I tell you," he construmstances. "I tell you," he con-tinued, emphasising his remarks -y striking a palm as soft and pink as a maden's blush, with a fat fore-finger "this sort of thing must be stopped, stopped at all cost."

The group moved into the Club, with Sproggs atill holding forth, and I sought an explanation of his agitation on the Esplanade, where I found Fellowworker King explaining the industrial situation to large and appreciation situation to a large and appreciative audence. After ironically congratulating his hearers on their good fortune in having a Labor Government to assist the ruling class in their schemes for situation to exploiting the workers, the speaker pointed out that the system of wage-slavery, the distinction of classes, the gross unequality of the law, the over-work of the laboring class, and tae im-moral luxury and idleness of the rul-ing class, can only be remedied by the embined strength of the workers. Just as long, continued our fellow-worker, as the workers are split up in-to scores of craft unions, with no ob-jective beyond a fair day's pay for a faur day's work, so long will continue the idleness and vicious luxury on the exploiting the workers, the speaker one hand, and oppressive labor and dread of starvation on the other.

During his address, which was tol-lowed with absorbed interest by the crowd, the orator pointed out that, notwithstanding the years that Labor had been in power, human lives held so cheap in the Golden West even a young girl's life, as a wage-carner in factory or laundry, may be earner in factory or laundry, may be bought for a few, a very few, shillings a day, and that knickerbockered boys are rapidly supplanting the adult work-ers, even in the socialised enterprises of the State.

the speaker was demonstrating the futility of the Arbitration Court as a means of securing a fair deal for the workers, I forced my way through the crowd that had formed behind me since my arrival, and strolled apart for a quiet smoke. While lighting up on the lee side of one of the noble shade trees that adorn our Esplanade, a trees that adorn our Esplanade, a small group near by attracted my attention. A casual inspection conveys the impression that they were stray wowsers, deploring the sacrilegious Sabbath pastimes of the workers. This general air of disapproval, their linguisticus faces, and in the crowd atteach burst of laughter or applause, served to strengthen this impression; rudely disputed, but the sacribus and the sacribus pelled, however, when I got within ear-shot. "Blime, Bob," exclaimed one,

"Blime, Bob," exclaimed one, d. dressing a flashily attired companion of sturdy build, "this J.W.W. cow is hot stuff," "Hot stuff," echoed the over-dressed one, "I hope to God—" and the stream of lurid denunciation, and blasphemous appeals to the Creator regarding our fellow-worker's future welfare, caused a dog slumbering close the order of the stream of the stre regarding welfare, caused a dog slumbering cross at hand to leap swiftly to a safe distance and bark defiance. "But, Bob," said the first speaker, when the profane Robert paused for breath, "he rane Robert paused for oread, "he can't make such a great difference with this talk of One Bg Union, we can only lose a few members at the worst." Bob raised his eyebrows in the man-Bob-raised his eyebrows in the man-ner of one who regrets weakness of intellect in a friend, and said, pitying-ly, "God give you sense, Billy, you need it badly. What the hell will rs union secretaries do if this crimson I.W.W. gets a hold here. Why," he ground out fiercely, "we might have to work."

Billy's jaw dropped, his eigarette falling unheeded as he muttered weak-ly, "Work, good God."

Direct Action.

Resistance to aggression is not simply justifiable, but imperative.—
iterbert Spencer.
Specially Written for "Direct Action."
By "AJAX."

The strength of Direct Action as "the hope of the workers" consists not merely in that the proletariat contains the necessary elements to deliver itself from wage slavery. Neither is the sensibleness of Direct Action born of the fact that immature elforts of passive resistance trica in labor revolts as direct methods of striking the enemy. Neither does it rest on the mental value and educational effect that Direct Action impacts. Note that value and educational effect that Direct Action impacts. in isoor revoits as direct methods of striking the enemy. Neither does it rest on the mental value and educational elect that Direct Action implies. Nor are the groups of workers now in silent or open rebellion against the inevitable inseries of capitalism to see in Direct Action merely an improved weapon of detensive highing; rather is it a weapon of aggression, teaching the workers the supreme importance of taking the muttalive. These things show the supremacy of direct action over every form of indirect action, the greatness of which lies in the lact that it is the straight road to the breaking up of commercialism.

Direct Action does not tinker with the religious, legal or political superstructure of exploitation, but directly attacks capitalism at the point of production, which is the root of the evil:

Retormers, lawyers, mystery mongers and charlatans galore find in politics their proper sphere. Their special training and the snobbish society in which they are reared render them emmently fit to function in the slimy slough of politicalism. Moreover, law is the product not the dictator of the system, and hasto be repeatedly altered to keep pace with the economic development which legality has never been able to adequately regulate, much less control.

Capitalism requires a servile and poverty-stricken mass, mentaliy with the economic development which legality has never been able to adequately regulate, much less control.

Capitalism requires a servile and poverty-stricken mass, mentally ignorant and economically on the brink of starvation. The capitalists in the past never hesitated to pass measures to attain that end. The press gang, navigation laws and enclosure of common land, and the harsal penanties, argainst descriping sallors and soldiers bear witness to this fact. The control of the harsal penanties, argainst descriping sallors and soldiers bear witness to this fact. The control of the harsal control of the harsal control of the hard to the effect that crime, poverty or disease is on the increase. The contiding public are reassured when the plutish press write down the author of those ramors as an "extravagant alarmist." Politicians, when reluctantly forced to recognise social evils, come forward with quack nostrums. Their cure is careful treatment. Keep quiet, go slow, step at a time, and so we gingerly proceed with baby bonuses for mothers, old age pensions for the decrepit; and new bogies for the politically deluded.

Many look upon the State as a a social saviour. The function of the class State is to perpetuate plutocratic power. Indeed, in some cases private enterprise was breaking down, and gladly welcomed such a variable ally. The State is interested in supporting militarism, sacerdot alism, legality, officialism, and other barbarisms. Af present, under the plea of reform, coercive legislation is passed (alleged to be socialistic,) which inevitably foreshadows the growth of the service State and the consolation of monopoly.

plea of reform, coercive legislation is passed (alleged to be sociatistic), which inevitably foreshadows the growth of the servile State and the consolation of monopoly.

Under a money regime, legislation leaus. — exploitation of the poor, never to economic salvation. Political action at best only attacks a reflex of property, reshuffles the cards), while direct action from below aims straight at the foundation of exploitation—private property. The question before the workers is not whether political action is better than direct action, but which is the correct method to "get the goods?"

The power of the master class does not rest on legality or Christianity. Neither is it political or spiritual. It existed prior to machinery, adult suffrage, or ameliorative legislation (a cant phrase). This power is essentially economic, and rests on Force. Not only military force, but the power of wealth, which means the control of all educational or administrative institutions. Some workers distrust. Parliament, others think law unjust, not a few sneer at the church, many grumble at officialism, but generally they fail to see clearly that all these monstrosities are component parts of a colossal whole, the State, which in the last analysis is one gigantic scheme of oppression and exploitation.

Time and again, when the workers have been persuaded to try indirect action, and submit their grievances and claims to a conciliation board or governmental committee, they have been bluffed or bullied out of their just rights. The slave class never derived any benear practically beaten the moment they accept authoritative decrees regulation from above. Historically everything of any value has becordered from below by direct action.

Direct Action presumes the worker will strike when, how and where he likes (as other classes do), not crawling to a capitalistic court—a place where the slaves cannot be, need not be, never were, and never will be represented.

Direct Action may take the form of sabotage or the boycott, and even lead to t was that they flouted all authority, and precedent and used direct action everywhere.

Since then much water has run under the bridges. Machinery is now relatively more valuable than land. The master of the tool of production controls industry and practically all else.

No tongue can tell or possibly bring home to the masses the manifold miseries machine production breeds, sufficient to say the efforts of reformists and political palliatives have failed dismally to soothe the social sore much less cure the cancer of competitive commercialism. Direct Action commands the wrath of the capitalist, the political opportunist, the horse-haired humbug, and the mitred hypocrite. To them it is anathema, and for that reason if no other, should command the attention if not respect of the worker.

Direct Action implies that a group or class refuse to abide by the rules of their alleged "superiors." It also means that the group concerned have the intelligence to rely on themselves, knowing what they want and the correct method to obtain it. It suggests that they refuse to be side-tracked with compromise, and decline to delegate their power to "lead kindly lighters." This is a logical attitude. No other class cares or can realise what the masses suffer. They alone have the experience and know their needs and aspirations. Every change that has brought a class to power has been effected by that class. What the masses-really require is direct action that will develop power, or rather the will to power, so ably preached to the aristocracy by Neitzsche.

With all their political Messiahs and trade officials, so far the workers in Australia have not yet produced a man able and willing to vecach them the philosophy of direct action, or invigorate hard-headed hobnails with the idea of the "will to power," As yet the workers only wish a thing while their officials put forth slavish requests to the effect that the men want so and so. It generally is but a wish timidly expressed, in which all thought of a determined demand backed up by iob conscious, not class conscious. All organisation, aims and possibilities are determined by the number of virile units the organism contains. The union may have large funds, monopoly of specialised labor, many members, and seemingly be very strong, but if the puerile types numerically overwhelm the virile spirits, sooner or later aspiring politicians, unscrupulous officials, etc., get control, and sidetrack the union with arbitration, politicalism, and compromise. The fact that these, things are happening every day is a sure indication that the mass don't understand their position, indeed the present condition of trade anionism here strongly suggests that the units individually in many cases haven't even attempted to reason on the matter; there seems to be a superstition that if a man takes a union ticket and votes Labor, all will be well. all will be well.

The main cause of this is because the mentality of the average worker is not sufficiently developed. Most of them are at best only (Continued on page 4).

Direct Action.

be a superstition that if a man takes a union ticket and votes Labor, all will be well.

Australian economic conditions formally favored the worker. Probably, if the unions had had the spirit to say "We will it," they could have obtained a six-hour day years ago. Meanwhile, the trust is growing, craft union organisations and tactics are almost obsolete; machinery is driving an increasing number of workers to the gutter. Female, child, and colored labor is being introduced. With increased immigration, child conscription, industrial arbitration, and other veiled methods of exploitation, connived at and enacted by the alleged representatives of labor in Parliament; the position of the wage slave is becoming worse. At times a teeble protest or moribund motion emanates from the Trades Halls, which is ignored by the powers that be. The capitalists are quite right to treat these feeble squeaks with contempt. They required a conscript army, therefore they took direct action to get it, irrespective of any hardships inflicted on the lower classes. The ruling class always act that way. Even the men of God, while preaching a slave philosophy to the masses, never hesitated to use force and violence to attain their ends, when they had the other hand, believe blindly, and therefore are ignorant as to the necessity of direct action.

institutions are but the reflex of the psychology of the mass. Ideas dominate society and determine all action. Intellect governs and knowledge is the key to power Until the workers educate themselves to the fundamental facts of their existence, no cohesion, purpose or collective will is possible. Being ignorant in the mass they are impotent in action, especially "direct action." They can table motions, petion Parliament, denounce the capituist, and dream of the coming of socialism until the cows come home, but all this talking, voting and waiting won't get the goods. In the war between capital and labor, when a crisis arises, only action—direct acion—counts. All else is futile. The reason workers are apparently beaten in strikes, is because they neglect to take "direct action." The bosses don't win; it's the ignorant workers who flounder into feeble forms of indirect action that beat themselves.

they, neglect to take "direct action." The bosses don't win; it's the ignorant workers who flounder into feeble forms of indirect action that beat themselves.

Labor has hung upon the cross of class slavery for centuries. Sometimes he has caught glimpses of a future freedom. Often he looked to the Golden Age behind, frequently he dreamt of a millennium to be. Along the age-worn agony of the class struggle the bonds have been loosened until to-day we see the old labor that knew only slavery and crucifixion is dying. The new spirit of rebellion, solidarity and freedom is arising. The spirit that is born of economic needs and nurtured by intellectual aspirations.

Direct Action, or Force, is the historic way that has settled all differences where class interests clash. These conflicting interests were never adjusted satisfactorily by compromise, legislation or political tarrydiddle, neither can these social scores be cleansed by the precious blood of Jesus!

Even when the ruling class appear to break ground it is generally to avoid the danger of direct action from the lower orders.

Direct action, whether on the economic, military or terrorist field, was ever the governing factor in every soical change. Direct action overthrew serfdom and feudalism. In the recent fierce strike in Italy direct action defeated legality. Direct action in Mexico to-day is deciding the issue in favor of the revolutionaries. When class antagonisms clash "might is always right."

Cabinets dissolve, gospel shops go bung, popes and kings die and other puppets reign. Social schemes are mooted, and legalists, sophists and philanthropists tinker with effects while ignoring causes.

The air is full of cries of revision and reform, which from a slave's standpoint usually means deform. Meanwhile, machinery improves, exploitation increases, trusts grow, the rich become richer, and the poor poorer. Irrespective of flags, creeds, races, or laws, wherever the withering hand of capitalism clutches for profits, it spells exploitation and misery for th

The I.W.W. Preamble.

The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. There can be no peace so long as hunger and want are found among millions of working people, and the few who make up the employing class have all the good things of life.

Between these two classes a struggle must go on until the workers of the world organise as a class, take possession of the earth and the ma chinery of production, and abolish the wage system.

We find that the centreing of the management of industries into fewer and fewer hands makes the trade unions unable to cope with the ever-growing power of the employing class. The trade unions foster a state of affairs which allows one set of workers to be pitted against another set of workers in the same industry, thereby helping to defeat one another in wage wars. Moreover, the trade unions aid the employ-ing class to mislead the workers into the belief that the working class have interests in common with their employers.

These conditions can be changed and the interest of the working class upheld only by an organisation formed in such a way that all its members in any one industry, or in all industries if necessary. cease work whenever a strike or lockout is on in any department thereof, thus making an injury to one an injury to all.

Instead of the conservative motto: "A fair day's wages for a fair day's work, we must inscribe on our banner the revolutionary watchword.
"Abolition of the wage system."

Human Rubbish as Heroes.

- A Mack.

"Presumably every self-governing country has power to deport persons who are considered undesirable for whatever reason, the only obstacle being that the other country may object to "Human Rubbish" being dumped on its shores, as England may object to receiving the trouble mongers whom the Cape proposes to deport thither."

We all remember the occasion that produced the above vitriolic exudation from one of our Sydney morning pap-

Early in 1914 when the workers were Early in 1914 when the workers were fighting against capital they were Human Rubbish; when they were being shot down and deported they were trouble mongers and industrial nuisances. But how different is the cry to-day, when they are fighting for capi to-day, when they are nighting for capital to assure them a greater share of the world's markets. Now the workers are "Heroes of the Dardanelles," "Our Heroes," "Our Brave Soldiers," e'c. One would scarce think it possible that our masters' opinions could change so our masters' opinions could change so completely in a short twelve months; press are always cunning llunkeys or the Most High. What a group of shameless sophists our so called rulers are! But what of ourselves who are so easily caught with flattering cries and fluttering clause. fluttering colours! What a dense mass

-fluttering colours!—What a dense mass of ignorance and vanity our rulers have to rule, or rather hoodwink.—
At our doors lies the guilt for our own degradation. We are so deeply sunk in the pit of ignorant apathy and "top-hat worship" that a moderately shrewd group of charlatans and parasites is enabled quite easily to beed us to their will and war and work; while we remain splendidly contentially constituted. while we remain splendidly contented if only we can imagine we are climbing further out of the social pit by treading some comrade of tell underfoot, or if only we be advanced the privilege of a flattering word from the boss. To such a pitch of miserable degra-dation has the psychology of the workation has the psychology of the work-ing class fallen!

Thus we see how the Human Rubbish of one day may be the Brilliant Heroes of the next! It all depends on wheth-or we are fighting against the boss, or fighting for the boss.

Fight the master class for better co ditions of living, and of working, fight them for better wages or for the aboli-tion of wage slavery, and we are Hu-man Rubbish; but obey the call to war, to shoot down the human rubbish of other capitalists and we are heroes, fix to wear a crown, fit, at any rate, to be bedecked with scraps of ribbon, bronze medals and gold braid! Oh, how well has the bead and medal trick served the masters of the human family! How well have they tricked and robbed the savage races with their beads, beer, bible and rum! We are not surprised our 20th century world's workers can be just as easily cajoled and led. We be just as easily cajoled and led. We should all be proud of our hero stigma after this. How many of the world's after. this. How many of the world's workers there are who prefer the hero hallmark is evidenced by noting the wild stampede to the warfields of Europe, all hoping for Bourgeois prusse and flattery and ribbons; but the only material benefit they will receive will be of the nature of wooden legs and coffins.

Many will come out of the mist of blood with enlarged brains, heroes, of course, but only for a time. When the great sign goes up "Business as usual," the alleged hero must cast his hero shell and take his place once more among the human rubbish crowd that goes hunting for jobs and a master—who was shrewd enough not to be a heromyth hunter.
Tis queer,

'Tis queer, isn't it, fellow workers, that this working class are the only people that can produce food, clothing and shelter, manufacture warships and big guns, in fact make all that mod-ern nations require and desire; and that we are the ones who must do all the fighting, also that we are the creatures of society who suffer all the pange and misery of hunger and gene-ral poverty! What does this master class do ex-what does this master class do except fool us (which act they call ruling)? Can you name any useful function they perform at all? If not, do you not think they are parasites? Yet these parasites are exempt, and they are the creatures who socially spurn us and economically fool and relieve us of two-thirds of what we relieve us of two-thirds of two-thirds of two-thirds of two-thirds of two-thirds of two-thirds of two-thirds lieve us of two-thirds of what we col-lectively produce! Still people tell me that men is by nature selfish; I often wonder which man they mean, for I'm ure it's not the working man.

Of course these superior people give us work (when they can make a profit out of us), and when there's no work well, there's always the gaol, and occasionally there's a war.

But we never protest, we of the hero-worship, Oh, no, it wouldn't be nice and respectable. We are too hon-est to demand anything for ourselves. We prefer to remain the human est to demand anything for ourselves. We prefer to remain the human bish grovelling at the feet of our industrial benefactors.

All things considered, do we deserve to be called human rubbish? I think me do, and we will deserve it while ever we allow this social system to obtain. To deserve better we must prove that we are worthy of a better.

We frave got to be rid of this wage system which turns so many of us into paupers and mental cripples. How are we going to do it? We must not fightfor liberty or spill any blood (we can only do this with glory when the boss orders us to shoot down foreign workers in war, or our own brother workers in strikes), we must wait for Evolution, so the politician tells us. But without Revolutions there'd be no evowithout Revolutions there'd be no evolution or at any rate no advance, for evolution appears to me but a period of progress made up by stages of appar-ent stagnation interspersed by violent

Do you not think it would be more noble and sensible to spill our blood 'u wiping this wage system off the slate than to spill it in a struggle for more markets for the master class of any country?

Think the question over, and when you have done so let us hear of you.

Sir.—The self assumed conceptive knowledge of F. Staines regarding matters pertaining to the business of our Seamen's Union generally is not our assumedly greater than that of the organisation, but is so overflowing as to prompt him to speak with a loud commanding voice of authority to the whole world, including Germany and Austria, through your issue of April 16th, in an through your issue of April 15th, in an ed exposition of things concerning the steamers Maori and Pateena, but the abundance of this knowledge will be gathered from his statement "that one of the Maori firemen sent a letter one of the Maori firemen sent a letter to the delegate of the Pateona, and his further assertion that "the engineer of the Maori was removed before the ship got under way again." In pitting facts against the knowledge of F. Staines, it may be stated that the lo-tter referred to was not sent to the Pa-teons delegate by one of the freener. teena delegate, by one of the firemen of the Maori, but by a fireman of the S.S. Mapourika; also that the Maori hold up occurred at Lyttleton on Jan-uary 29th, and on February 13th the ship had a full crew and got under way once more with the same engineer as caused the trouble, and this engineer has been constantly on the ship since up to early this month, May. In conclusion, may I tender a little advice to Mr. Staines & pay strict attention to his own bit of business, and never to discuss that of others that he knows nothing of. I am, etc.,
